

The Institute of Forensic Psychology invites applications for a Doctoral Level Psychologist Position. This is a contracted position working with an expert level team, conducting forensic evaluations. Pre-licensed individual seeking advanced training in evidence-based forensic clinical psychology practices and court ordered legal issues that commonly present for forensic evaluation will be considered. The justice involved client populations will consist of adults and adolescents within settings that include traditional residential, psychiatric, incarceration, and outpatient therapy settings. IFP is a forensic evaluation organization, with a teaching and education in forensic psychology division and research in forensic psychology division. There are opportunities in these divisions as one is possibly interested.

A Ph.D./Psy.D. in Clinical Psychology or Counseling Psychology is required. Other related doctoral psychology backgrounds may also be considered. Individuals who fill this role will gain valuable experience in conducting a variety of forensic evaluations among a diversity of client populations served by IFP and its affiliates. The successful candidate will conduct forensic evaluations in criminal court, family court, and at times civil court.

Required Qualifications:

- Ph.D./Psy.D. in Clinical Psychology, Counseling Psychology or another related doctoral program, from an APA-accredited graduate program.
 - Completion of pre-doctoral internship at APA-accredited site. Non-accredited completion sites may be considered.
 - Licensed or license eligible
1. Skill and experience in providing psychological clinical and evaluation services to justice involved clients and/or clients with acute or chronic psychological problems.
 2. Advanced training in various evidence-based approaches to forensic evaluation with adolescents and adults.
 3. Advanced training in evaluation methods in psychology with adults and adolescents.
 4. Knowledge of state and federal laws and legal requirements.
 5. Knowledge of psychological and psycho-legal testing

The values of IFP are expressed in the mission and values statements of which we adhere, which was developed by members of our community and affirms our unswerving commitment to doing what's right, making things better, and being kind. These are the standards to which we hold ourselves, and one another.
